1. The first step in the process of the development of a new product is the identification of a market need. This is often done through market research, which can be conducted in a variety of ways, including surveys, focus groups, and interviews. The goal of market research is to gather information about the needs and preferences of potential customers, as well as to identify any gaps in the market that a new product could fill.

2. Once a market need has been identified, the next step is to develop a concept for the new product. This involves creating a detailed description of the product, including its features, benefits, and target market. The concept is then presented to a group of potential customers, who provide feedback on their reactions and suggestions for improvements.

3. The third step in the process is to develop a prototype of the new product. This is a physical model of the product that is used to test its feasibility and to gather feedback from potential customers. The prototype is typically made from a material that is easy to work with, such as wood or plastic, and is designed to look and feel like the final product.

4. Once a prototype has been developed, the next step is to conduct a small-scale test of the product. This involves selling the product to a small group of customers and gathering feedback on their reactions. The goal of this test is to identify any problems with the product and to make any necessary adjustments before moving forward with a full-scale launch.

5. The final step in the process is to launch the new product. This involves creating a marketing plan that promotes the product and its benefits, and then distributing the product to a wider audience. The launch is typically followed by a period of monitoring and evaluation, during which the company tracks sales and customer feedback to determine the success of the new product.

In the event of any bankruptcy or similar proceedings, costs of collection shall include all costs and attorney fees incurred in connection with such proceedings, including the fees of counsel for attendance at meetings of creditors' committees or other committees.
10. This Note shall be governed in all respects by the laws of the State of Colorado.
